

In the UK the work of one of the most significant females of the Spiritualist movement was inspired by Mrs Wilkinson. Mrs Houghton painted some of the most significant Spirit art of the time, work which was recently the subject of a major exhibition in Melbourne.

Then In the 1920's a very interesting series of 42 paintings were produced by Ethel Le Rossignol. She and her husband had returned been nurses through the First World War. On her return she was inspired to work by Spirit. The picture below is the final piece after which she ceased her Spirit Art, it is called Consummation. There is one, very rare, book concerning her work.

"Consummation", the final of 42 works from spirit JPF through channeling artist Le Rossignol, showing the out-stretched arms of the loving master ruling over the many unified realms of incredibly detailed and symbolic imagery.

REFLECTIONS FOR THE MONTH:

SPIRIT ART

Spirit Art has a long history in the records of Spirit attempting to communicate with us. The types of painting most people will think show the likeness of a loved one or a spirit guide. Two of the mediums whose work is most celebrated

are Coral Polge

and Frank Leah.

(From the spirit world came this woman to pose for her portrait by the artist who clairvoyantly saw her passing. She was Ethel Gibbon's mother. The photograph was taken on her 102nd birthday).

In fact the move to paint loved ones was a more recent variation with most of the early work being far more of an abstract presentation. Indeed at times it formed a type of prelude to the work of later artists

Indeed the very first recorded work was by a Mrs Wilkinson in,1853 which was entirely inspirational, visions painted by the artist apparently at the behest of their guide. Her work was to set the trend for many others who followed the path of Spirit Art.

In retrospect some of the work produced seemed fanciful given our current knowledge of the planetary system, although it did reflect the common opinion of the day.

The Canals of Mars was painted by Helene Smith and is an example of the problems which need resolving when considering abstract impressionistic work. Helene was studied intensively by the Physical Researcher and Psychologist Theodore Flournoy and he finally concluded that her creations came purely from the impressions created by her subconscious mind based upon existing knowledge. (These findings were published in the book "From India to the Planet Mars")
